

The Realization of Sustainable Urban Development based on the Presence of Vital Ecological Functions and Important Natural Processes

Farhad Rezazade

MA student in orientation of architectural design of educational facilities

Ali Khodaie

Msc student in geography and urban planning

Abstract

The attitude of ecological cities, regions composed of dense and associated ecosystems is a natural disturbance (Caused by human activity) which Natural capital must maintain a certain range of conditions to be met and chronic pollution and degradation. Maintain or restore health and sustainability of favorable conditions in cities, In terms of environmental, with various aspects of their most fundamental and urban land reform and a return to a proper relationship (productive health) is stationed between urban and natural pack. This research using qualitative research methods to gather descriptive information bilateral relationship between man and nature, Sustainable development in the field of environment, Cultural, social and urban package, Takes steps to be taken in this regard. Therefore, it is necessary that all countries take advantage of opportunities to influence the trend in the direction of sustainable development guide.

Keywords: sustainable urban development, ecological functions, natural processes.